JUST THE TITLE CAUGHT MY ATTENTION: Greater Good Science Center at the University of California at Berkeley. The mission of the Center is to sponsor groundbreaking scientific research into social and emotional well-being, and to help people apply this research to their personal and professional lives. Since 2001, the Center has been at the forefront of a new scientific movement to explore the roots of happy and compassionate individuals, strong social bonds, and altruistic behavior—the science of a meaningful life.

The gist of the research suggests that happiness does not lie in consumption or materialism. "We confuse those things with happiness," sociologist Christine Carter said. There are three basic activities that create happiness: "feeling grateful for the good things in your life, taking time with your family and using every opportunity you can to help others." "When you train your attention on what you feel grateful for, you are highly likely to miss the hassles," Carter said. "Our brains act as giant filters. We are either going to notice what we appreciate or things that tick us off."

Fostering family rituals, playing games, common activities; creating pleasant get-togethers; and opting for a positive attitude among family and friends can bring buckets of happiness.

And studies of emotional stimulation prove the old saying "it is better to give than receive" is not just folklore. When you are focused on others you become distracted from yourself. And it just makes us happier.

Dacher Keltner, founder of the center and a UC Berkeley psychology professor, said his research on the vagus nerve in the brain is reinforcing the importance of compassion. The vagus nerve extends from the brain down to the abdomen, and it reflects and stimulates feelings of happiness. Dacher's research with doctoral candidate Craig Anderson indicates that showing compassion, maintaining eye contact and taking time to relax with techniques such as taking a deep breath all result in a well-stimulated vagus—which in turn makes you happier.

I am sure that some of you are rolling your eyes about now. But the Center asserts that "happiness is a skill" not something dependent on a person's genes. Learning to enjoy life takes concentration and work. "It's all about what you practice and think about" Carter said. Learn more at the Greater Good Science Center's website: www.greatergood.berkeley.edu.

In your recent church contribution packet, there is a green envelope for THE CATHOLIC EXPONENT the Diocese of Youngstown's bi-weekly newspaper. We are changing our practice with The Exponent. IF you wish to receive The Exponent you must now SUBSCRIBE by using the green envelope and pay the annual subscription rate of $20.00. You can drop your subscription envelope into the Sunday Collection basket and the office will handle the rest of the details.

Blessings,

Rev. James M. Daprile, Pastor

As he passed by the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and his brother Andrew casting their nets into the sea; they were fishermen. Jesus said to them, "Come after me, and I will make you fishers of men."
